

ALEXANDRIA, VA.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, AUGUST 16, 1882.

MR. MASSEY says "he regards the State debt question as settled, certainly settled so far as legislation can avail, and the Legislature having done its part, the whole subject is now turned over to the courts. If the Supreme Court of the United States shall decide this legislation valid it will stand, but if it shall not so decide, the question is nevertheless settled, and any man who shall hereafter attempt to agitate the debt question will only make himself ridiculous,"

Neither democrat, republican nor readjuster can object to that, for the court referred to is the last resort in all such questions, but General Mahone's Richmond organ says the State debt question is not settled. But the Mahoneites are opposed to boiling and bubbling, because then they come to the surface.

AT THE recent Indiana State republican convention Mr. Richard W. Thompson, one of the delegates, delivered himself of a speech, in which he made sneering alluvociferous and hearty applaste. The Mr. Thompson referred to was Secretary of the Navy under the Fraudulent Administration, and is the same man who offered to give a brace of pistols--that belonged to the Government-to General Woodford, of New York, with which to defend himself against the judge, jury and officers of a court in a Southern State. He was born and bred a Virginian, but when Virgians fall they fall further than other people. Nothing better was to have been expected of Mr. Thompson, but it bodes no good to the Republic when the delegates to a State convention applaud contemptuous allusions to the author of the Declaration of Independence and the friend of religious liberty.

AN INTELLIGENT and observant writer in the last number of the Atlantic Monthly, in the term Bourbon is always applied by many Northern journals, and it would be come into power, 'when Bourbon rule is broken up, educational endowments and trusts are likely to be less secure and less valuable than they now are."

The writer referred to must certainly have had the schools of Virginia in his mind's eye when he penned this article.

THE MAHONEITES deny that they are implicit followers of a boss and assert their individual independence. They certainly ought to know more about this than anybody else, but if they are sincere in what they say, how strange it is that they should obey General Mahone's instructions to coalesce with the Arthur wing of the republican party. If there was any convention of Mahone authorized to issue the order referred to, and which they are obeying so implicitly, it is more than the public has yet been apprized of.

THE OSTENSIBLE object for which Mr. Hubbell is collecting money from the federal office holders in Virginia-to print campaign documents-is no better than the real object, which is to bribe voters, for while the effect of the latter will be to degrade and debase Virginia voters, that of the former will be no less objectionable, inasmuch as most of the documents referred to are upon "rebel debts," "rebel claims" and "rebel pensions," the purpose of which is to prove that Southerners, including Virginians, are a nation of mercenary thieves.

COL. CHARLES T. O'FERRALL, of Rockingham county, was yesterday nominated for Congress by the democratic convention of the 7th district, now misrepresented by Paul. There was but one ballot taken. FROM WASHINGTON

Special Correspondence of the Alexandria Gazette.] Washington, D. C., August 16.—The more voluminous the intelligence from Virginia becomes, the more certain it appears that the Mahoneite party in that State is dissolving, and that as its only cohesive power, public plunder, is rapidly reaching settlements. A settled condition of affairs the exhaustive point, it will soon be resolved is not conducive to their prosperity. Their into its elmentary components and leave baleyon days are when public affairs are nothing to mark its former power but two misrepresentatives of Virginia in the U.S. Senate, some State judges with bad reputations, and an unpleasant memory. General Mahone, it is said, has been promised thirty thousand dollars by the Republican Congressional Committee, with which to carry on his campaign. But what is that for so large a State as Virginia, even if sions to the character and services of Tho- placed where it would do the most good, mas Jefferson, which were received with and not, as it must be, entrusted to unreliable hands. It is said that the straightout republicans all over the State feel that they have been outraged and that they have determined to let the President see that though General Mahone has promised him the support of Virginia in the next national repubican convention "he can't deliver the $100,000. goods." It is also said that wherever a politial meeting is held in the State, no matter by which party it may have been called, any allusion to the defeat of Mahone is received with cheers, while favorable remarks about him elicit no applause, and that already his followers are reduced to those who either hold offices or hope to get them through the General's influence.

A telegram received here to-day from Senator Brown states that Senator Ben Hill died at a quarter past six o'clock this morning. POLITICAL.

A coalition republican is authority for the statement that Col. James D. Brady will be made clerk of the new Court of Appeals. If that be true, his candidacy for Congress in the Petersburg district is likely to be a blind for the advancement of the interest of some other Mahoneite aspirant.

It is said that Gen. Mahone has been greatly annoyed at the course of Mr. Fulkrson in the ninth district. That district is the great stronghold of the coalitionists. In order to secure harmony among Fulkerson's followers Mahone is credited with entertaining the idea of offering that gentleman a post as minister to Peru, which the General's friends say Arthur will place at his disposal. The coalition convention assembles at Marion, Smythe county, at an early day, and Fulkerson has already secured a large number of the delegates to that body. It is not known whether the bait of a diplomatic post will catch him.

The Trial of Garland. Yesterday was the second day of the trial of Garland for killing Addison in Lunenburg. Garland seemed somewhat more neryous than on Monday, and looked much paler. He occupied the same place, next to Emory J. Garfield, a cousin of the late his father, and near him, sat Boswell, who is under indictment as an accessory. Roach also charged as an accessory, stood outside the bar an interested spectator. Miss Mamie L. Hatchett, is in North Carolina, and no after daybreak his family were summoned effort will be made to compel her attendance. The testimony of Mr. Orgain was important, he being an eye-witness of the crime charged, and it was given clearly, concisely, succinctly and impartially. His examination occupied the greater part of the day. He testified that on the morning of which was administered. He appeared to July 14th he was sawing wood at Wedderburn's mill, where he was engaged when Boswell came to the mill on horseback. Eanes, who was present, introduced Boswell to Addison, who was also present. Boswell said: "Mr. Addison, a gentleman by the name of Garland is waiting up there in the road, and wants to see you." Addison said: "All, right." Boswell suggested that he take some friends along to see fair play. To this Addison demurred; but as Boswell insisted, he turned to witness and Eanes and said, "Boys you all come on." The party then proceeded out the Mill road in the direction of Ward's road, Addison and the witness together in the lead, and Boswell and Eanes following. After they had proceeded about one hundred yards witness noticed Mr. Jones coming after them They stopped to wait for Jones. When Jones reached them Boswell, who was on horseback, rode about ten or fifteen paces ahead, and Addison, Jones, Eanes and witness followed together. In this order the party ceive all chiefs who are disposed to assist in came to Ward's road, which is about half a repressing the rebellion. mile distant from Wedderburn's mill. Boswell crossed the road and tied his horse. Just before reaching Ward's witness, saw Garland and Roach coming down Ward's station, and freight ears were carried into a field near by. Much damage was done to eral direction of this road. The witness continued: "Just as I was about to enter Ward's road I saw Garland and Roach standing about twenty or thirty yards distant, up of operations and the Turks and British both Ward's road; both, I believe, were in their shirt sleeves. As Addison came in the road country. Garland and Roach reached the entrance of the Mill road. At this moment Boswell, who had been tying his horse, returned, and introduced Garland to Addison, saying: "Mr. Garland here is Mr. Addison, whom you wish to se." Garland addressed something to Addison and the latter replied by a word or two. I did not eatch what was said by either, but noted Addison nod his head as if in assent. Then Garland raised his hand, I think his right hand, as if to strike. As he raised his hand Addison stepped back and quared off, as if to ward away the blow. Garland then placed his hand on his pistol which I saw protruding from his pants pocket as I came up. It was in the right hip pocket, commonly called the pistol pocket. Mr. Addison upon this stepped back and said: 'None of that, none of that; you can't come that on me. When Addison placed himself in a position of defence they were close enough to strike. Addison then drew his pistol and fired ; Garland fired immediately after. Just after Garland fired his first Addison raised his pistol to fire again, but it snapped. Garland continued firing, and Addison attempting to fire, but his weapon snapped. I saw it snap several times, but did not know that Addison fired but once until I was so informed by him while on the field. After Garland fired his first shot he paused for a very brief space of time, then fired several shots in rapid succession. I did not count how many. About the time Garland had emptied his pistol, Addison, who had been stepping back each hickory tree on the side of the road, about seven or eight steps from where the firing commenced, and was leaning against it in a stooping position. The tree was about at the junction of Ward's road and mill road. Garland at this point stepped up to Boswell who was standing near, and asked him for the other pistol, or another pistol, I don't know which. Boswell handed him a pistol cent. and Addison then stepped into the road and said: 'Gentlemen, foul play; that is not fair. My pistol has refused to fire but once, and I have no other.' Boswell then said: 'Get from behind the tree, or you got behind the tree, I don't know which. At this Eanes and Jones stepped into the road in front of Garland and said something I did not catch. In reply to Jones or Eanes, Garland said: I am satisfied if you are.' Addison, who was walking up to us all, then said : Well, boys, I am done for; I am shot through the bowels.' I then went to him. This was the first time he said he was shot. I then saw Boswell doing something to Garland's arm. I took off Addison's coat, hat, collar and cravat, laid them together at the side of the road, and took his head in my lap. Eanes went for a carriage. Garland and his friends in the meantime left. I asked Addison which shot struck him, and he said the first shot. Mr. Hendricks and Mr. Gallion came up, and Mr. Hendricks and I examined Addison's pistol, and found one chamber had been discharged and cartridges with indentations of the hammer on them in the other chambers." The size of the tree against which Addison leaned was brought into question, and instruction was given by Judge Perry to have the tree cut down at the root and brought into court. The letters, which have heretofore been published, were produced and read in court, and iden-The witness testified that Addison told him when the first letter from Miss Hatchett came to hand, that Miss Hatchett told him that when Garland addressed her and she refused him, he (Garland) said he knew why she refused him; that one of Addison's particular friends had told him that though Addison was engaged to her he was only flirting with her, being at the time engaged to a young lady in Washington. This engagement with Addison was the reason why she had refused him, and he (Garland)

W. H. Burnett was the next witness called. He testified that on the 13th of July, the day before the shooting, he was passing long Ward's road, about half-a-mile from Wedderburn's mill, when he came to Garland and Roach. After exchanging some remarks with them he asked why they were there, to which Garland said he came to settle a difficulty with Mr. Addison,a man whom he did not know even by sight, and that Boswell had gone to Wedderburn's mill to bring Addison. Garland was in his shirt-sleeves, and had the butt of a pistol projecting from his hip-pocket.
